

Dear Senator Frist, You're Right. Parents of Vaccine-Injured Children Want to Sue Drug Companies for a Bazillion-trillion-million-gazillion Dollars.

Actually, You Couldn't Be More Wrong.

All We Want is Care for Our Injured Children.

You see, Senator Frist, when you have a sick and disabled child, you don't really care about monetary gain. After all, who would possibly want a lavish vacation to Bora Bora when their child has chronic diarrhea? Who would want to go buy a new Mercedes when their child doesn't want to leave the house? Would you care about jewelry if your child had a bad reaction to almost every food? Would you want to go snow skiing if your child always had seizures? Could you actually stomach caviar if your child shrieked in pain all day long? Do you really think we want to impress our friends at the next barbecue with meaningless status symbols? Do we even go to barbecues? Perhaps you just don't get it.

It's not about money in the traditional sense, Senator Frist. When we walked into our doctors' offices, we were promised lifetime care if something went wrong. It has. Now you're taking that away. Why?
